Exporters Say American
Consuls Are Underpaid

Reorganization of Service Is Suggested by Trade
Association

Plans for the reorganization of the American diplomatic and consular service will be considered by the Manufacturers' Export Association at the Waldorf-Astoria, October 16 and 17, with a view to submitting them to Congress for enactment into law. Such a reorganization is vital to the future of American trade, in the opinion of the special committee which has been considering the subject.

William G. Clegg, former ambassador to France, will be the principal speaker at the meeting. Phillip E. Kennedy, chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce; Alba B. Johnson, formerly president of the Baldwin Locomotive Works; Ogdon Hammond, of the National Civil Service Reform League; W. H. Nichols, of the American Manufacturing Company; E. P. Thomas, of the United States Steel Products Company; and H. E. Cole, vice-president of the Standard Oil Company of N. Y. are scheduled to address the meeting.

Consular representatives, the association holds, are underpaid. Their average salary of $2,500 is regarded as far below the sum a representative of the United States to maintain himself with self-respect.

A special committee of the Association has been working for several months on a report which will be presented to the consideration of the Association for further suggestions and amendments. This report, if adopted, will be submitted to Congress with the weight of the manufacturing interests of the country in support of its enactment into law.
